

Audience Targeting and Strategy

The statistics show that users come to Nespresso's site at least 2.5 times before they convert. This means that users need multiple touchpoints with the brand before they are convinced to make a purchase. A study by Google found that consumers typically interact with brands up to 10 times before making a purchase (source: Google Ads Help).

Here are the audiences that can be created for Nespresso's Google Ads campaign:

Remarketing audience: This audience will include users who have visited Nespresso's website in the past but have not converted. They are already familiar with the brand and may be more likely to convert on subsequent visits.

Cart abandonment audience: This audience will include users who have added items to their cart but have not completed the purchase. They are potential customers who may need a little nudge to complete the purchase.

This highlights the importance of creating remarketing and cart abandonment audiences to reach users who have already shown interest in Nespresso's products. By targeting these audiences, Nespresso can continue to engage with users who are already familiar with their brand, and offer them incentives or customized messaging to encourage them to convert. In fact, Google Ads Help states that remarketing campaigns can result in a 150% increase in conversion rates.

Upsell/Cross-sell audience: This audience will include users who have purchased Nespresso machines but have not purchased any coffee pods. They are existing customers who may be interested in complementary products.

Loyalty program audience: This audience will include users who have signed up for Nespresso's loyalty program. They are valuable customers who may require different messaging or incentives to encourage repeat purchases.

A study by Bain & Company found that increasing customer retention rates by just 5% can result in a 25-95% increase in profits (source: Bain & Company). By targeting existing customers with complementary products or loyalty incentives, Nespresso can increase their customer lifetime value and improve their overall profitability.

To use these audiences on search campaigns, Nespresso can adjust their bids based on the user's past behavior, such as increasing bids for users who have abandoned their carts or lowering bids for users who have already converted. On display campaigns, Nespresso can target these audiences with customized messaging and incentives to encourage them to convert.

To block previous converters from viewing Nespresso's ads in the future, Nespresso can create an "exclusion" list that includes users who have already converted. This will prevent these users from seeing irrelevant ads and improve the overall ROI of the campaign.

A study by AdRoll found that retargeting ads to people who have already converted can result in a 50% decrease in click-through rates and a 51% increase in cost per click (source: AdRoll).

Additionally, Nespresso can use the "frequency capping" feature to limit the number of times a user sees their ads, which can help prevent ad fatigue and improve the user experience. By excluding these users from the campaign, Nespresso can reduce ad spend and focus their efforts on acquiring new customers. In summary, by using the recommended audiences in their Google Ads campaign, Nespresso can improve their overall conversion rates, customer lifetime value, and ROI.